Bratton ends his policing career

William J. Bratton, former Boston police commissioner and Los Angeles police chief, will end his 43-year public career by stepping down next month from his national law enforcement role in New York.

His only reason to leave, Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa said, was to spend more time with his family.

Bratton, 61, has worked for the Los Angeles Police Department for 20 years and for the Boston Police Department for 10 years.

He was named chief of police in September 2007 after the death of William J. Callahan, who had led the Boston Police since 1997.

Bratton's arrival in Boston was widely expected, as he had worked for the Los Angeles Police Department for 20 years.

A TRIUMPH LONG IN COMING IN FIGHT FOR EQUAL PAY

SHIRLEY LEUNG

COMMENTARY

A new federal law that requires employers to pay women the same as men for the same job is a landmark victory in the fight for equal pay.

But federal legislation, it's not just the recent workday. Many of the other workers, including for child care, have not been paid equally.

It took a long time to get here. And it's not just the recent workday. Many of the other workers, including for child care, have not been paid equally.
